Workwise has expanded its partnership with housing in the past year with four employment consultants / kairapu tūranga mahi integrated with The People's Project (Hamilton and Tauranga); and for the first time, an employment consultant integrated with LinkPeople in South Auckland.

We believe that people shouldn't have to put their employment goals on hold because they have experienced homelessness. Having a paid job can help with preventing homelessness, increasing self-sufficiency and community integration. It also brings health and wellbeing, financial security, an increased sense of citizenship and can lead to a decrease in negative social impacts. We see the benefits bringing intergenerational change to many people and their families.

Offering employment support as an integral part of other health and social supports is therefore crucial.

This year, we worked with 136 new people - helping them to find and stay in work.

“When you're in mahi, it gives you a bit more financial security. It's a foot in the door.” - Daniel

“The constant communication has been great. When there's been a setback, the employment consultant has advised us straight away. The flexibility has been great, seeing Workwise stepping in with other supports and ideas. They have made quick progress, sorting out problems. They have the time to listen to Daniel's needs.” - LinkPeople Case Worker
